

HELEN AND NESTOR: A LOVE STORY

Once upon a time in ancient Greece two young people, Helen and Nestor were getting ready for marriage. One day before the wedding they made the wedding table which consisted of: wheat, barley, fruit, vegetables, breads, cheese and fish.

In the Olympus Mountain the goddess of love and beauty Aphrodite was very jealous and she wanted to get married the handsome Nestor. So, Aphrodite wanted to destroy their relationship. She had a plan, she was disguised as a man. The man's name was Apollo. She appeared as Apollo in front of Nestor and told him: I am Helen's husband. When Nestor heard that, he couldn't believe it. He met Helen and told her that they should stop seeing each other. Helen was shocked and asked him why. Then he told her about Apollo and Helen said that it wasn't true. Aphrodite was very happy for this.

Few days later Helen saw Aphrodite was transformed again as Apollo. Helen ran to tell this to Nestor. Nestor couldn't believe it and the next day they went to the same place and saw Aphrodite transform as Apollo again. He was very angry and very sad because he had stopped his relationship with Helen. Nestor said "I am sorry Helen" and finally they got married.

Helen wore for the marriage a white chiton (χιτώνα), brown sandals and gold jewellery. They were glad, drank red wine and ate meat with vegetables. Helen and Nestor lived at a small house made of clay and stones in Athens. They had two kids, Aristotle and Philip who went at a small school which had only one teacher and about ten or twenty boys. Aphrodite found her real love to god Aries and everyone lived happily ever after.
